Russert Mourned on 'Meet the Press'

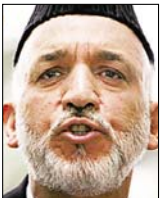

A SON'S LOSS: Luke Russert, son of late moderator of "Meet the Press" Tim Russert, touches his father's chair on the show's set on Sunday. The chair was left empty during Sunday's broadcast, dedicated to Russert's legacy. Russert, who had hosted "Meet the Press" since 1991, died on Friday at age 58 from a heart attack. ♦ Tribute show: Colleagues, friends recall Russert | Page 4

Afghans Threaten Pakistan

Karzai warns he may send troops to chase the Taliban

KABUL, AFGHANISTAN | Afghan President Hamid Karzai threatened Sunday to send Afghan troops after notorious Taliban leaders inside Pakistan in an angry warning to his eastern neighbor that he will no longer tolerate cross-border attacks.

The threat — the first time Karzai has said he would send forces into Pakistan — comes only days after a sophisticated Taliban assault on Kandahar's prison freed 870 prisoners and six weeks after Karzai survived his fourth assassination attempt.

Karzai

Karzai has long pleaded with Pakistan and the international community to confront tribal area safe havens, and U.S. officials have increased their warnings in recent weeks that the sanctuaries in Pakistan must be dealt with.

Last week, U.S. aircraft dropped bombs along the Afghan-Pakistan border, an incident the Pakistan army said killed 11 of its paramilitary forces. The exchange ratcheted up increasingly touchy relations among the U.S., Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Analysts said they doubt military action by Afghanistan is imminent, but Pakistan's prime minister said the threat "will not be taken well." A Taliban spokesman warned that the Afghan army would be defeated by thousands of armed tribesmen.

Monkey Can Also Make Tools, Type

A spider monkey used a garden hose to scale the wall of a moat at a Michigan City, Ind., zoo before being captured at a nearby boat dealership. One of two spider monkeys recently added to the Washington Park Zoo broke out of its enclosure this week while workers were cleaning the moat, which had been emptied of water. Zoo Director Johnny Martinez says workers had figured the monkeys would remain inside their enclosure during the cleaning despite the lack of water in the moat to act as a barricade. Once past the moat Wednesday, the escaped monkey jumped onto the roof of a water filtration plant. Martinez says zoo staff captured the monkey from atop a speedboat. (AP)

Frank Keys Jr. faces up to 40 years in prison after he was found driving with more than 200 grams of heroin in the diaper he was wearing. Keys, 38, of New Orleans was charged Friday. He got in trouble June 3 in St. John the Baptist Parish, north of New Orleans, when sheriff's deputies pulled over the car he was in for a traffic violation, according to court documents. The occupants were ordered out of the car and were patted down. During the pat-down, "officers felt a large hard object in the pants area on Keys," according to the U.S. Attorney's Office. Keys told officers he was wearing a diaper and when they asked whether there was anything in the diaper, he "shook his head affirmatively," the office says. (AP)

A Father's Day Message

Calling himself "an imperfect father," Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., spoke of the need for African-American men to live up to their responsibilities during a Father's Day sermon Sunday.

Saying that too many black fathers are "missing from too many lives and too many homes," Obama said these men "have abandoned their responsibilities, acting like boys instead of men. And the foundations of our families are weaker because of it."

Speaking at Chicago's Apostolic Church of God, Obama said that more police on the street and job training programs are essential for a safe and sound society, "but we also need families to raise our children."

"I say this knowing that I have been an imperfect father — knowing that I have made mistakes and will continue to make more," Obama said. "[But] even as we face difficult circumstances, there are still certain lessons we must strive to live and learn as fathers — whether we are black or white; rich or poor; from the South Side or the wealthiest suburb." Rivers Bedevil Iowa Towns

Swollen waters are overwhelming hastily constructed defenses

IOWA CITY, IOWA | A week's work of frantic sandbagging by students, professors and the National Guard couldn't spare this college town from the surging Iowa River, which swamped more than a dozen campus buildings and forced the evacuation Sunday of hundreds of nearby homes.

The swollen river, which bisects this city of about 60,000 residents,

FLOOD COUNTS

Some numbers from the widespread flooding in Iowa:

- Number of deaths: 3
- Evacuees: Roughly 36,000
- Counties declared federal disaster areas: 24
- Sandbags used: 4.8 million
- Acres of corn lost: 1.3 million was topping out at about 31.5 feet — a foot and a half below earlier predictions. But it still posed a lingering threat and wasn't expected to begin receding until Monday night.

"I'm focused on what we can save," University of Iowa President Sally Mason said as she toured her stricken campus. "We'll deal with this when we get past the crisis."

Iowa City Mayor Regenia Bailey said 500 to 600 homes were ordered to evacuate, and hundreds of others were under a voluntary evacuation order through the morning.

Gov. Chet Culver said it was "a little bit of good news" that the river had crested, but cautioned that the situation was still precarious.

"Just because a river crests does not mean it's not a serious situation," he said.

Elsewhere, state officials girded for serious flooding threats in Burlington and southeast Iowa, including Fort Madison and Keokuk. Officials said 500 National Guard troops had already been sent to Burlington, a town of about 27,000, and some people were being evacuated.

Culver said the southeastern part of the state was likely to "see major and serious flooding on every part of the southeastern border of our state from New Boston and down."

In Cedar Rapids — where flooding had forced 24,000 people to leave their homes — residents waited to get their first up-close look since flooding hammered most of the city. (AP)

The percentage of U.S. adults who say they have used the Internet to read or watch unfiltered campaign material from politicians running for office, a new Pew survey found.

Democratic strategist James Carville, left, holds the hand of his wife, Republican strategist Mary Matalin, during the taping of "Meet the Press" Sunday in memory of moderator Tim Russert, who died on Friday of a heart attack in NBC's D.C. bureau.

Russert's Legacy Honored

'Meet the Press' chair left empty for tribute to reporting legend

NEW YORK | Tim Russert's chair was empty on "Meet the Press" on Sunday, two days after his unexpected death.

But Russert was very much present on the full-hour tribute to this giant of political journalism who hosted NBC's public-affairs program for more than 16 years.

"His voice has been stilled," began Tom Brokaw, "and our issue this sad Sunday morning is remembering and honoring our colleague and our friend."

Brokaw and a half-dozen others were seated in front of the "Meet the Press" set and its angular table, left vacant, where Russert had presided as recently as last week.

Brokaw noted that Russert had a large wooden sign in his office that read: "Thou Shalt Not Whine," which Brokaw then supplemented with "Thou shalt not weep or cry this morning. This is a celebration."

Russert

But a bit later he choked up, recalling Russert's words of awe at how far a kid from Buffalo like himself could rise: "What a country!" he would marvel.

Among those gathered were historian Doris Kearns Goodwin and political pundit Mary Matalin, with Maria Shriver — the former NBC News correspondent and current first lady of California — on a remote hookup. All agreed that Russert was tough but fair in his interviewing, and that he loved politics and politicians.

What he didn't like, said consultant-pundit James Carville, was an elected official or anybody else who wasn't prepared to face him.

"The biggest insult to him was someone who came on and ... didn't take the show seriously," Carville said.

However fitting Sunday's tribute, it was a cruel irony that Russert had become the big story, particularly in the midst of a historic presidential race. Guests he had planned to grill Sunday were officials from the Obama and McCain campaigns.

Son Says Sen. Kennedy Resting Up

SMITHFIELD, R.I. | Sen. Edward Kennedy enjoyed the Father's Day weekend surrounded by family at his home and preparing to "do battle," undergoing radiation and chemotherapy treatments for his brain cancer, said his son, Rep. Patrick Kennedy.

The Rhode Island congressman told The Associated Press his father had been comforted by the company of friends and family in recent days, but that his visitors were aware he needed moments of quiet and breaks from entertaining.

"Everyone wants to be with him. But we also need to give him space and time to recover, where he doesn't have to be 'on,'" he said. "He's been through a lot. We want him to be strong for when he needs to do battle." (AP)

Al-Sadr Rethinks Plan for Iraq Vote

Cleric's party to back candidates on other tickets in fall election

BAGHDAD | Followers of anti-American cleric Muqtada al-Sadr will run candidates on other party tickets in upcoming Iraqi provincial elections, a top aide said Sunday, in an apparent bid to sidestep what they believe is a government campaign against their movement.

The decision is part of a sweeping strategic change by the militant cleric as the Shiite-led government gave Shiite militiamen in an al-Sadr stronghold four days to surrender heavy weapons or face arrest.

The new strategy includes a decision announced Friday by al-Sadr to set up an elite wing within his Mahdi Army to fight the Americans, enabling him to reassert control over his 60,000-strong militia that the U.S. says has fallen under Iranian influence.

Al-Sadr's followers hope to use this fall's provincial council balloting to loosen the grip on power that their Shiite rivals have enjoyed since the January 2005 elections, which the Sadrists boycotted.

"We are not boycotting the provincial elections," said Sheik Salah al-Obeidi, a senior al-Sadr aide in the Shiite holy city of Najaf. "We will participate but not in a clear list for Sadrists. We will support independent figures and people whom we find suitable."

Al-Obeidi said any Sadrists who want to run in the elections would join other tickets and represent the movement on an individual basis.

The elections — expected to begin in October — will choose governing councils in Iraq's provinces and are seen as a key step in repairing sectarian rifts. QASSIM ABDUL-ZAHRA (AP)

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice speaks in the West Bank on Sunday.

Rice: Israel Threatens Peace Plan

U.S. envoy says Israeli actions cast pall over talks with Palestinians

JERUSALEM | Israel's persistent building of Jewish homes on disputed land undermines the U.S.-backed attempt to write an Israeli-Palestinian peace draft this year and invites questions about Israel's motives, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice said Sunday.

Using exceptionally harsh language, the visiting U.S. envoy said Israel must understand the pall its actions cast over talks and on the confidence of the United States, European nations and others that Israel is bargaining in good faith. She said the Jewish state has apparently picked up the pace of housing expansion since President Bush inaugurated negotiations with a summit in Annapolis, Md.

"We should be in a position of encouraging confidence, not undermining it. No party should be taking steps at this point that could prejudice the outcome of the negotiation," Rice said following meetings with Palestinian officials in the West Bank.

She said Israeli actions are having a "negative effect" on the atmosphere for talks, and she stressed that the U.S. won't regard any settlements Israel builds now as permanent Israeli territory.

Israel announced last week it would build 1,300 new homes in east Jerusalem, which Palestinians want as their future capital. ANNE GEARAN (AP)

A peaceful repeat vote at a dozen polling stations in Macedonia Sunday confirmed the ruling coalition's landslide victory in parliamentary elections that had initially been marred by violence, election officials said. Kosovo's Constitution Takes Effect

Charter gives newly independent nation sole governing power

PRISTINA, KOSOVO | Kosovo's government took control of the newly independent nation Sunday as the country's constitution went into force after nine years of U.N. administration.

The charter — a milestone that comes four months after leaders declared independence from Serbia — gives the government in Pristina sole decision-making authority.

But it threatens to worsen ethnic tensions between Kosovo's majority Albanians and Serb minority. Security in the divided northern town of Mitrovica was high a day after a gunman attacked a police station, wounding one officer.

Kosovo's president, Fatmir Sejdiu, left, signs Kosovo's constitution in Pristina on Sunday. The charter gives the government in Pristina sole decision-making power.

“Today the dream of the people of the Republic of Kosovo has come true.”

HASHIM THACI,
KOSOVAR PRIME MINISTER

Kosovo's ethnic Albanian leaders marked the transition in a low-key ceremony in the capital Sunday that opened with Kosovo's newly approved, wordless anthem.

Prime Minister Hashim Thaci told local and international dignitaries the constitution comes after years of “hardship and sacrifice.”

“Today the dream of the people of the Republic of Kosovo has come true,” he said. NEBI QENA (AP)

Death Toll From Japanese Quake Increases to 9

KURIHARA, JAPAN | Rescue teams digging their way through a ravine buried in mud Sunday pulled three bodies from a hot springs inn, bringing the death toll to nine after a powerful earthquake rocked northern Japan.

Soldiers caked in mud and using hand shovels recovered the bodies of the inn's 80-year-old owner and two others buried when the 7.2-magnitude quake struck Saturday, triggering several major landslides.

Four more were believed buried in the wreckage of the inn. Another 100 people in a nearby hamlet remained stranded and were being airlifted out.

Meanwhile, hospitals treated more than 250 people with injuries. Another dozen were missing. (AP)

Jared Cavalier, owner of Segway of Ohio, installs an accessory on a Segway in Columbus, Ohio. Segway sales have jumped as gas prices climb nationwide.

Nerdy Ride Saves Cash

Segway scooters' popularity increases due to high gas prices

ON THE ROAD | Paul Feeney didn't commute with the Segway his parents gave him for Christmas in 2005 until he moved close to work this spring. The battery-powered, energy-efficient scooter makes the 1.4-mile commute fun, the 35-year-old Sun Microsystems sales representative said.

It also makes his commute a lot less expensive.

When the Segway Personal Transporter came out in 2001, inventor Dean Kamen said the self-balancing vehicles would revolutionize short-distance travel. At first, however, they appealed mostly to police, mall security crews and airport personnel.

With gas prices escalating, sales are growing. One Segway dealer identified as one of its top five in the U.S. — Riva Motorsports of Pompano Beach, Fla. — sold almost 200 in 2006, 250 in 2007 and 175 in the first five months of 2008, said Riva spokesman Matt Sermarini.

"Anything that seems to be economical on fuel or doesn't use fuel at all, people are definitely researching and buying," Sermarini said.

Jared Cavalier, the Columbus Segway dealer who sold Feeney his scooter, said the increased interest has allowed him to open stores in Toledo and Cincinnati this year.

"These last few months have been fantastic," Cavalier said. "We unbox them and they go out the door the same week."

The Segway's $5,000 price tag and its geekiness — they were among many targets of Weird Al Yankovic's parody "White & Nerdy" in 2006 — are probably the biggest limits on its popularity, Feeney said.

"Five thousand dollars is an issue," Bedford, N.H.-based Segway Inc. president and CEO Jim Norrod acknowledged — though he predicted the sales growth rate of 40 percent to 50 percent in recent years will continue in 2008.

Dealers have seen a further uptick of 30 percent to 40 percent in walk-in traffic in the past month as people look for antidotes to expensive gasoline, said to Carol Valianti, a spokeswoman for Segway Inc. DOUG WHITEMAN (AP)

WALK FOR A CAUSE: More than a dozen death penalty opponents plan to walk 300 miles in the next two weeks from Raleigh, N.C., to Washington, D.C., to call for an end to capital punishment. The walk began Sunday at Central Prison and is scheduled to end June 29 at the U.S. Supreme Court.

Prince George's County police are investigating two homicides from early Sunday. Police say they found 28-year-old John Charles Crawford fatally shot inside his home on Zelma Avenue in Capitol Heights, when they arrived around 1:30 a.m. They say it appears he was shot after confronting a person who tried to burglarize his home. In another incident, police found a man's body on the ground on Roosevelt Avenue in Landover just before 8:30 a.m. Officials say the man had upper-body trauma and was pronounced dead at the scene. Va. Mulls Altering Special-Ed Laws

Parents worry they could lose involvement in children's schooling

RICHMOND, VA. | Matthew Jenkins was diagnosed with autism when he was 2½ years old, but his parents say he's made good progress in school, largely with the help of an educational specialist who works with his regular teacher to make sure he's getting the help he needs.

But now Matthew's parents worry that if a new set of state regulations take effect, the school can take away the specialist without their consent, a fear state education officials are trying to downplay.

"What we've got going now is working," said the 7-year-old's father, Eric Jenkins. "If it's not broken, don't try and fix it."

Jenkins is among many parents concerned about proposed changes they say would undercut their involvement in their children's education. Drawing the most attention is a proposal to allow school officials to end special-education services for a child without the parents' approval.

The measure is among several in the Virginia Department of Education's 315-page draft regulations, which are open for public comment until June 30.

Virginia Gov. Timothy M. Kaine has told the state Board of Education that he opposes changes in special-ed law that reduce parental involvement.

The board is expected to vote on the regulations in the fall.

Public Schools Test Same-Sex Classes

WASHINGTON | Some Washington area public schools are trying out single-sex classrooms as they explore whether separating boys and girls boosts learning and performance.

Proponents of same-sex schooling argue girls and boys have different learning styles, and that they are more successful if they're in classes tailored to their needs.

The National Association for Single Sex Public Education, based in Montgomery County, says 500 public schools nationwide will offer single-sex classes by next fall.

Some public schools in Prince William, Prince George's and Fairfax counties have tried the method or plan to start doing so.

In D.C., two new charter schools that plan to offer same-sex classes are slated to open in August.

But some experts argue there isn't enough research to confirm whether separating boys and girls in public schools helps achievement. (AP)

Casto blasts a 3-run, pinch-hit home run to break an 8th-inning tie

NATIONALS | Rookie Kory Casto's pinch-hit, three-run homer off the foul pole broke an eighth inning tie and led the Washington Nationals to a 6-2 win over the Seattle Mariners on Sunday.

The Nationals swept their first three-game series since last September and handed the Mariners their seventh consecutive home loss. It is the longest home losing streak for the Mariners since they lost eight straight in 1996 at the Kingdome.

Casto's first career homer came off reliever Mark Lowe (1-3). Casto, who grew up in Salem, Ore., was 0-for-14 in his previous five games. Washington recalled him June 3 from Triple-A Columbus.

Aaron Boone led off the eighth with a double, and he advanced to third on Felipe Lopez's sacrifice bunt. Lopez reached first on the play. Casto, pinch-hitting for Wily Mo Pena, homered to right on an 0-1 count.

Laker Draws Attention to Darfur

Seldom-used reserve Ira Newble helps bring focus to refugee crisis

NBA | The children drew pictures of women with babies being shot in the back by soldiers, of helicopters and planes dropping bombs.

Those pictures and the faces of the children who drew them remain sharp in the mind of Ira Newble, the Los Angeles Lakers forward who visited two refugee camps in Chad last August and heard stories from victims of the deadly conflict in Sudan's Darfur region.

"They watched their family members being shot. They drew what they saw," Newble said. "It was emotional."

Fresno State Baseball Advances

BASEBALL | A Fresno State team that struggled to make it to the College World Series rewarded itself with an easy win in its first game here.

Danny Muno, Alan Ahmady and Jordan Ribera launched three-run homers and the Bulldogs' post-season run continued Sunday with a stunning 17-5 victory over Rice.

The Bulldogs — the ultimate underdogs as the first No. 4 regional seed to reach Omaha — broke open the game against their one-time WAC nemesis with a seven-run fourth inning. They didn't stop there, rolling up the most runs allowed by Rice this season on their way to their 12th win in 14 games.

If folks in college baseball still don't believe in the Bulldogs, that's fine with them.

"That has been a big part of what has gotten us this far," center fielder Gavin Hedstrom said. "We like proving we're better than people say we are." ERIC OLSON (AP)

Switzerland Puts One in the Books Vs. Portugal, 2-0

EURO 2008 | Hakan Yakin scored twice Sunday to give Switzerland a 2-0 victory over Portugal, helping the co-host end its European Championship with a first-ever win at the tournament.

With Portugal already through to the quarterfinals as Group A winner and the Swiss eliminated after two losses, Yakin opened the scoring after a flicked pass by fellow striker Eren Derdiyok in the 71st minute. He shot through the legs of goalkeeper Ricardo from about 14 yards.

Yakin added his second goal on a penalty kick in the 83rd minute after Fernando Meira fouled substitute Tranquillo Barnetta.

It sealed Switzerland's first win in three European Championship appearances, albeit against a Portugal team that rested eight starters. (AP)

The striker scored two goals in three minutes late in the match against the Czech Republic to finish off an incredible comeback, giving Turkey a 3-2 win over the Czech Republic for a spot in the European Championship quarterfinals.

Nihat profited from a blunder from goalkeeper Petr Cech who fumbled a simple cross in the 87th minute. He put the loose ball into the unguarded net to tie it.

Carell exercises his knack for character revival in 'Get Smart'

ADAPTATION | Steve Carell is no stranger to taking established pop culture characters and reshaping them into his own image.

As the star of the American version of the hit British series "The Office," Carell plays the pompous and deluded boss at a paper company, a variation of a character created by Britain's Ricky Gervais. For the big-screen adaptation of "Bewitched," he tackled the role of Uncle Arthur, played on the '60s TV series by the late great comedian Paul Lynde. And when Jim Carrey passed on reprising his "Bruce Almighty" character, Carell stepped up from supporting player to star in the sequel,

"Evan Almighty."

No wonder Carell jumped into the shoes of special agent 86 in the film adaptation of "Get Smart," opening June 20, based on another famous '60s TV series. Created by comedy giants Mel Brooks and Buck Henry, the James Bond-inspired spy spoof ran from 1965-70, initially on NBC, and later on CBS. The late comedian Don Adams played secret agent

Maxwell Smart, who worked for the super-secret spy agency CONTROL.

Partnered with his gorgeous colleague, Agent 99 (played by Barbara Feldon), Smart kept America safe from the evildoers, though he was a bit of a bumbler.

"Once Steve signed onto the project, everything sort of fell into place," says director Peter Segal, who previously helmed another spy spoof, "Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult."

Though the adaptation has plenty of references to the TV series, including Max's shoe phone and the spy agency's "cone of silence," "Get Smart" isn't just a retooling of the classic; it's an action-filled thriller as well.

"Steve and I refer to it as a comedic 'Bourne Supremacy,'" Segal says.

It's an origins story as well, though set in the present. Smart (Carell) is a CONTROL analyst who spends his days monitoring enemy chatter on the Internet and writing long, sleep-inducing reports. What he really wants is to be a field agent like his idol, Agent 23, a smart and suave spy (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson).

"The humor springs from Max's unbridled enthusiasm combined with a woeful lack of practical experience," says Segal.

But it's the wannabe spy's unwavering confidence in himself — even when things goes awry — that sets him apart from other spies. That, and dumb luck. ANGELA DAWSON (ENTERTAINMENT NEWS WIRE)

Lil Bit Odd, Lot Bit Talented

Lil Wayne's eclectic style and pointed wit make for a solid No. 6

MUSIC | Hip-hop is full of eccentric characters, but most of their oddball behavior is an affectation. Lil Wayne is the real deal. "We are not the same/I am a Martian," he declares on "Phone Home," one of many hits-in-waiting on his sixth solo album, "The Carter III."

We should have known. If his raspy, cartoonish voice didn't mark him as different, his quick wit, off-handed wordplay and quirky subject matter should have in a genre populated largely by grim-faced imitators. Wayne steers his rhymes into outlandish corners on songs that range from the super-lean beat on "It's a Milli" to the R&B groove on "Mrs. Officer," featuring Bobby Valentino doing his sexiest police siren imitation while Wayne fantasizes about dating a cop.

He employs enough stylistic variations on the album to accommodate other guests, including Busta Rhymes, T-Pain, Jay-Z and Robin Thicke, who helps Wayne get serious on a soulful song about the devastation Hurricane Katrina visited on Wayne's native New Orleans.

It's not quite enough to pin him with the socially conscious label (the bawdy lead single "Lollipop" precludes that), but it's a pointed, powerful song that shows this jokester has a sincere side, too. ERIC R.

Flaming Horror Music Show

Evangelicals bring religious fervor to their psychedelic rock

HORROR | Evangelicals are compared frequently to the Flaming Lips. Both bands hail from the unlikely breeding ground of Oklahoma and share a penchant for cinematic pop and over-the-top theatrics that make their live shows must-see events.

Calling attention to these similarities, however, might prompt Evangelicals' lead singer, Josh Jones, to be uncharacteristically brief. He might, for instance, not respond at all.

But with the release of this year's "The Evening Descends" (Dead Oceans), the band feels as if it has finally come into its own, putting those nagging comparisons to rest.

The band's live show is a sight to behold, a flurry of strobe lights and glow paint that enhances Evangelicals' fuzzy pop-psychedelia.

Those unfamiliar with Evangelicals' music might find its preference for "B" horror flicks and "The Rocky TUNES FROM THE CRYPT: They look like ax murderers, but they're indie rockers.

"Horror Picture Show" an odd source of inspiration for a contemporary indie band, although Jones finds the hybrid a natural fit.

The various splats and screams strewn throughout the band's music make for an effective foil against Jones' serious, self-reflective lyrics and songs that often revolve around characters teetering on the brink of insanity.

When pressed to elaborate on his lyrical topics, Jones is cheerfully evasive.

"There's a lot of fodder there," said James. "Crazy people doing crazy things create some worthy moments."

Look for about 40 minutes worth at the Black Cat. MATTHEW SIBLO

Southern Grace

Holly Hunter rose to the top by being poised and picky

SELECTIVE | Was there ever a less like-ly movie star than Holly Hunter?

Feisty, diminutive, unmistakably Southern, a crackling fireball of energy and eccentricity, her presence turns the conventional notion of stardom on its head. She has nothing of Halle Berry's glamour, nothing of Angelina Jolie's sex appeal.

But what she does have is a ferocious talent that has led to numerous memorable roles over the course of more than two decades — from the batty cop in 1987's "Raising Arizona" to the superhero mom in 2004's "The Incredibles," to TNT's "Saving Grace," one of the best women-driven series in years.

It's a body of work that would make any actress proud, though not the sort that is usually rewarded with a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, which Hunter recently received.

There's something about Hunter that's far removed from the manicured confections of Hollywood's past. Rather, she seems utterly contemporary: edgy, troubling, powerful, vulnerable — an incarnation of the modern world.

She has found it best to convey those facets in independent, rather than studio, films. Indeed, she's been almost absent from studio filmmaking her entire career, with the prominent exceptions of "The Incredibles," 1989's "Always" and her Oscar-nominated work in 1993's "The Firm."

"I was always extremely particular," Hunter told an audience in London at a screening of 2003's "Thirteen." "From the beginning, I was never desperate. I did other things for money; you know, the normal, boring stuff: I temped, I did waitressing. But I actually quit a play early on in my career — it was one of the first things that I ever got cast in — but I quit because there was something about it that I didn't like."

That commitment to her art has made Hunter one of the best actresses of her generation, as her colleagues testify.

"Every day she blows my mind," says Nancy Miller, executive producer of "Saving Grace." "We have 12-hour meetings where we go through every scene. And the preparation she does is unlike anything I have ever seen. She has made me a better writer." STEPHEN GALLOWAY (THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER)

In Bob's Shadow, Jakob Sings

MUSIC | It speaks to his success that Jakob Dylan is legitimately most recognizable nowadays as the focal point of the Wallflowers, but there will always be expectations that come his way simply because he is Bob Dylan's son. That is particularly true for the material on his first solo record, "Seeing Things," as the 38-year-old treads into a realm where his father is part of the iconography and explores his own perspective on a focused, mellow collection of stripped-down folk-style ruminations.

Dylan's solo work is simple and folksy.

It is an album of bare essentials, consistent in its Rick Rubin-produced coolness as Dylan takes a mannered approach and etches resignation onto the sparse acoustic backdrop of "Evil Is Alive and Well." His singing is a string of raspy exhalations, a measured and folksy wrapper for the despondent musings on "War Is Kind," one of several tunes that assess the outside world through introspection.

Atmosphere is built in blankets rather than patches, and Dylan avoids sudden moves, whether navigating the relaxed stream of perspective in "This End of the Telescope" or the sturdy, blues-edged "All Day and All Night." Essential download: "All Day and All Night." THOMAS KINTNER (THE HARTFORD COURANT)

FAUXHAWKS IN TRAINING: Bravo has announced the development of its new creative competition series. A "Top Chef" spin-off, the show will feature chefs between the ages of 13 and 16 competing for the title of "Top Chef Junior."

Children of 'The Sixth Sense'

On A&E's 'Psychic Kids,' youngsters have chilling visions

CREEPY | Nearly a decade after "The Sixth Sense," we're still seeing dead people. In fact, they won't go away. The success of shows like "Ghost Whisperer" and "Medium" have made "sensitives" of us all. So, it's no wonder we're now faced with "Psychic Kids: Children of the Paranormal" (10 p.m., A&E), a new series, inspired by "Paranormal State," that focuses on kids who have been communicating with spirits since before they could read.

Faced with children between 8 and 14 who regularly see spirits and auras, parents are at their wits' end. Who ya gonna call? They summon a medium and psychologist named Chip, and Lisa, an aura-reading sensitive. Together, they try to put moms and dads at ease while asking the kids details about their haunted existence.

One 8-year-old befriended the spirit of a young man named Freddie

KAROLINA WOUTSIN/A&E

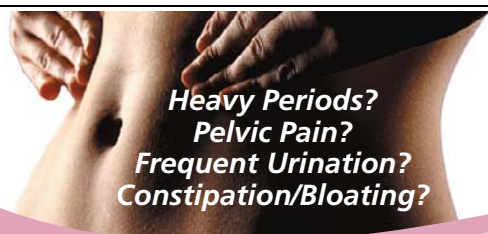

SHRINK TO THE RESCUE: Psychologist Chip, right, counsels haunted children.

Stuart, who died in 1886. Freddie's spectral mother, Catherine, isn't too thrilled about the idea. It might be because she murdered Freddie.

Chip calms the family by digging up census records that indicate the existence of a certain Freddie Stuart born nearby in 1872. And while he can't prove who murdered him, Freddie's mother was named Catherine.

Whether you watch this as a factual documentary or enjoy it as a campfire ghost story, "Psychic Kids" makes for chilly summer viewing. I could do with fewer moody shots of tangled branches, misty graveyards and abandoned houses. And the title makes no sense. "Children of the Paranormal" implies that they are the offspring of psychics, much like the daughters on "Medium." But, as we've discussed, it's the kids who have got the shining. The parents are in the dark. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

Incentive programs encourage students to do their best work

Friday is payday at KIPP DC: KEY Academy, and some sixth-grade girls gather at the makeshift school store trying to decide how to spend their hard-earned money.

They received paychecks for behaving well, doing their homework or making academic gains. The money is pretend. But it can be used at the store for genuine items such as pens capped with fluffy feathers, pencil cases shaped like animals and colorful erasers.

Schools, under pressure to boost student achievement, are offering incentives — field trips and real cash, for example — to motivate students.

At KEY Academy, a public charter school serving low-income, minority students in the nation's capital, Cherise Johnson Wallace proudly clutched a pencil case she bought at the school store. She was glad to have the trinket but even happier about what it represented.

"It shows how I work very hard to earn good grades," she said, flashing a smile as she rattled off the A's she had earned.

That kind of pride is what supporters of rewards programs point to. They say the prizes motivate kids at first and that the children eventually form good study habits and become interested in succeeding regardless of whether rewards are on the line.

The charter school's principal, Sarah Hayes, is a believer.

KEY Academy is among the city's top-performing schools, as judged by test scores. "I think a lot of that is tied back to our incentives program because it reinforces to the students that our expectations of time on task are serious and that you get rewarded for them," Hayes said.

Studies into the effects of school-based rewards programs are limited. But research by an independent think tank at Stanford University indicated they can raise scores. A separate study examining schools in Ohio that paid kids for passing state tests also showed score gains after the incentive program was enacted.

In New York, about 5,500 students can earn real money for getting good test scores. The program is open to fourth-graders, who can earn up to $250 per year, and seventh-graders, who can end the year with $500 in the bank.

"We'll soon give out over $1 million to fourth- and seventh-graders

PICK ME: Students raise their hands at the KIPP Academy in Washington, D.C., where they receive incentives for good grades.

Grades That Pay

Two sixth-graders pick out cool new items for class at the KIPP Academy in D.C.

“What is the difference between this and giving children an allowance as an incentive for doing their responsibilities?”

QUEEN MAKKADA, PRESIDENT OF A PARENTS ASSOCIATION

this year," said Roland Fryer, a Harvard University economist leading the experiment. He said he is happy with the results so far.

Queen Makkada, president of the parents association at a school participating in the program, said the fourth- and seventh-graders seem to be working harder. She dismissed those who say these kind of approaches amounts to bribery.

"What is the difference between this and giving children an allowance as an incentive for doing their responsibilities?" she said, adding that many parents in her neighborhood cannot afford to give kids an allowance. "This program allowed our children to experience what life is like when you have more to work with."

Some question the long-term impact of rewards programs.

Edward Deci, a psychology professor at the University of Rochester in New York and an expert on motivation, said rewards can persuade kids to work harder to boost test scores. But he said that effect probably would be short-lived.

"Will their motivation to be doing their schoolwork or learning be positively impacted by that once the rewards stop? I think the answer to that is pretty clearly no," Deci said.

He also said there is evidence that once a reward is taken away, people become even less motivated than they were before the experiment began. He said that is true regardless of the reward's value.

He said schools must make learning interesting, so children want to participate and do well.

Rewarding students is not new. Gold stars and pizza parties have been around for ages. But the new programs are more systematic. They are often available on a school-wide basis or throughout certain grades rather than just doled out by select teachers, many times with their own money.

At KEY Academy, said Hayes, "You're not the teacher that has to go to the 7-Eleven to buy the bubble gum to give to the kids on Friday."

Paddington's Return

Children

As the iconic bear turns 50, a new book places him in 2008

He was found at a railway station, a small immigrant from “darkest Peru” with a floppy hat and a sign around his neck reading, “Please look after this bear. Thank you.”

Paddington Bear’s first adventure appeared in print 50 years ago, and author Michael Bond is celebrating the milestone with a new adventure for the beloved bear.

His book “Paddington, Here and Now” features the bear named for a railway station in London encountering a distinctly 2008 world inhabited by tabloid journalists, tire-clamping traffic cops and anti-burglar paint.

Paddington still gets into trouble — he’s just that kind of bear, as Bond would say — but never fails to display optimism, good manners and an exceedingly healthy appetite for marmalade.

“It really started with a doodle,” Bond recalls during an interview in his garden in London. “I had a small bear that I bought for my first wife as a stocking filler. We called it Paddington because it was our leaving station when commuting in the morning.”

In 10 days in his one-room flat, Bond created “A Bear Called Paddington,” a tale that resonated the world over. Soon, he was able to quit his day job at the British Broadcasting Corp.

The Paddington books have sold more than 35 million copies and have been translated into 40 languages, including Latin (“Ursus Nomine Paddington”).

Paddington is a bear with a past. He stows away on a ship after his Aunt Lucy moves into the home for retired bears in Lima.

Rumpled and tired, his story begins at Paddington railway station, where the quintessential English dad, Henry Brown, stumbles upon him while waiting to pick up his daughter. Brown fetches his wife, who melts at the sight of the bear with the sign hanging around his neck.

The image came from searing memories of refugees and evacuees who streamed through British train stations before and after World War II, seeking security in safer places. Many of those children had tags hung around their necks with their names and destinations. Bond recalled their vulnerability in his original book. “That was an important part of Paddington’s persona,” he says.

“A Bear Called Paddington” was soon followed by more than a dozen other novels and picture books. A TV program spread his reach even more. At Paddington station, a bronze statue was erected in his honor.

Children bond with Paddington, says author Francesca Simon, because they see a creature smaller — and more lost — than they are. They understand what it’s like to get into trouble. Plus, there’s something appealing about having a secret history.

The new Paddington book, which went on sale in Britain and the United States last week, will be just the beginning of this year’s Paddingtonmania. A Paddington movie is in the works. An anniversary range of clothing, rugs and garden accessories will be launched. A special Web site devoted to the anniversary, Paddington50th.com, will help fans keep track of events.

“He’s very real,” Bond says. “If I met him on the street, he’d raise his hat to me.” DANICA KIRKA (AP)

CLOTH CALLS: Nicole Miller, above, readies a model for her resort 2009 collection show in New York on June 11.

Bali & Beautiful

Nicole Miller takes her inspiration from the latest island styles

If you can't make it to Bali next winter, picking up a few pieces from Nicole Miller's Resort 2009 collection — which she presented in New York last week — would be your next best option.

Miller's colorful collection of resort wear took its inspiration from traditional Balinese prints, which she applied to crinkled silk tops, sarongs, swimwear and dresses, punching up the colors along the way with bright, fruit-flavored colors.

Miller said when she was in St. Barts last winter, she had brought a mostly white wardrobe to wear. But when she arrived, she didn't feel like wearing white — she wanted to wear something more colorful. Her assistant had been on a trip to Bali and brought back all kinds of colorfully printed fabrics and traditional clothing. "That's what I should have worn in St. Barts!" said Miller.

“All the men wear sarongs that have these checker prints, so it looks like a mismatch, but actually it's not.”

NICOLE MILLER, DESIGNER

"All the men wear sarongs that have these checker prints, so it looks like a mismatch, but actually it's not," Miller said about a colorful printed silk dress with checker ruffles extending from the dress.

Not all the pieces were a literal reference to the traditional Balinese garb. In other pieces, the prints were used abstractly, as in a jersey dress with a patchwork version of the swirling, cloud-like print used elsewhere in the collection.

The focus with her resort offerings, like many other designers, was on light-as-air, comfortable fabrics — in Miller's case, silk.

"I'm always trying to reinvent silk fabrics," she said. The collection uses silk in a variety of ways, from the fabric she calls "ripstop," a kind of textured silk similar to a parachute, to silk georgette, to a cotton/silk blend that gives a cotton skirt, for example, an added dose of softness and effervescence.

Balancing out the loose, unstructured tops and dresses were skinny jeans and stretch linen shorts for layering underneath. If you're city-bound rather than sipping mid-winter tropical drinks, it's a good way to stay warm while still imagining you're on an island. RENATA ESPINOSA

Beauty

Mixed-Up Lips

Do you miss finger painting, that ultimate excuse to cover your hands in wet, sticky paint and smear together countless colors? Well, introduce your digits to Revlon's MIX & MINGLE LIP PALETTE ($10, drugstores) and you can do a little mixing the big girl way. Blend silver with magenta to make violet. Combine orange-pink with gold to make tangerine. Twirl together tangerine with magenta to make, um, tangerine-magenta. It's almost as satisfying as creating puke green.

It's Here to Stay

Once TARTE FOUR-DAY LASH STAIN ($18, Sephora) goes on, don't expect it to give up without a fight. It stayed on for four days all right — progressively losing luster after the second — but did not want to come off when its time was up. (Oil-based makeup remover will do it, but nothing else.) If you're planning to walk through a car wash, fight fires or party for several days straight, this is the mascara for you. If you want a humble mascara that will bend to your will, try something less stubborn. HOLLY J. MORRIS (EXPRESS)

Discussions

Guantanamo Bay

Washington Post Supreme Court reporter ROBERT BARNES was online Friday to discuss the court's decision against the Bush administration on Guantanamo detainees in ruling that the prisoners have a constitutional right to be tried in U.S. federal courts.

I don't recall German and Japanese prisoners in WWII getting access to the courts. Why can't the Department of Defense just declare the detainees at Guantanamo to be prisoners of war?

That was a point made in the dis-sents Thursday. The majority opinion said hearings were needed in this case partly because being found an enemy combatant, and thus subject to indefinite incarceration, could mean being locked up for a “generation” or more.

When the presidential candidates are campaigning this summer and fall, do you think they will raise the issue of their potential Supreme Court nominations with respect to this case?

I always think that Supreme Court appointments are going to be a bigger issue in presidential elections than they usually turn out to be. And I don't think there is anyone who doesn't believe the next president will have a chance to make one or two appointments to the court.

Is the Defense Department planning to continue the military commissions already in progress at Guantanamo? What impact will the Boumediene decision have on those cases?

Yes, there are about 20 prisoners who have been charged with specific crimes, and military authorities say those proceedings will go forward. Lawyers for some of the detainees said [Thursday] they believe the decision will have some impact.
